

Day #22, Activity #22

Metaphor Monday:

Where's the Sun? There it is.

*"But soft! What light through yonder window breaks?
It is the east, and Juliet is the sun.
Arise, fair sun, and kill the envious moon,
Who is already sick and pale with grief,"*

—William Shakespeare, Romeo and Juliet

After a long stretch of clouds and rain, it's great to see the sun again. Time for a spirit boost so get outside if you can and soak up a little sun, and while you're at it, practice your metaphor skills.

Metaphor- a comparison of two unlike things without using like or as.
The qualities of one thing are applied to another.

Examples:

"The dog is the doorbell of our house."

*"The sun is a yawning cat at noon
Spreading itself across the backyard
For a midday nap."*

Write about it:

What is the sun to you? A blanket, a friend, a treasure?

What animal would the sun be?

What type of transportation?

What type of athlete?

Set your course, enjoy the sun, and start writing.
