

Day #25, Activity #25

The Place You Love to Be

“One’s destination is never a place, but a new way of seeing things.”

—Henry Miller, American writer

Many of us have that one special place where we love to be, that one place where we feel comfortable or inspired or free. Perhaps it’s a room in your house, the backyard, a basketball court, a summer cottage, a cabin in the woods, a beach, a car, a pond, a park, a restaurant, a friend’s house or a treehouse.

Write about it.

Now, take us there. Describe how to get there and then what it looks like. Who will we find there and what will the weather be like? When do you go there and why? What activities do you do there? Make this place come to life with your attention to sensory detail and your observation skills. Give us the tiniest details about this place and what you love about it.

Or

Write a poem about this place.

Or

Choose your favorite spot and make a list of all the things about it that you love.
